Apollo Enterprise Solutions, Inc., web-based payment, debt collection and recovery technology provider, announced this week a beefed up version of its Intelligent Decisioning System, dubbed Centurion 2.0. This service allows debtors to self-pay and self-settle money owed.

Joseph Konowiecki, chairman and chief executive officer of Apollo, estimates that Centurion 2.0 is 10 times faster than the existing system it is moving off from, as well as contains modified regulations concerning federal and state debt laws, among other new features.

"We have seen that our clients have been under additional pressures to comply with stress tests, congressional scrutiny and regulatory scrutiny," Christopher Imrey, president and founder, says, explaining this system aims to help their clients maintain compliance.

Already, Apollo is working on Centurion 3.0, and where as version 2.0 updates focus more on the consumer experience, version 3.0 updates will cater more to the agent side, says Konowiecki. He expects 3.0 to hit within six to nine months.
